When people need to look up words, some choose to use a dictionary, and others use their phones. There are other choices, too. These days, many prefer to search for words on their smartphones.

What are the reasons for this? Some find it faster and more convenient to use a phone because it's always with them. Other people like that their phone can give them not just the meaning, but also how to pronounce the word. Because of this, they can learn new words more easily.

On the other hand, some worry that relying on phones too much might make us lazy in learning. This can be a problem because we might not try to remember words on our own. Some also think looking at phones a lot can be bad for our eyes. As a result, they believe using phones for looking up words has its downsides.
